Those who embark on study of the vast subjects of Shaw's biography and his manifold associations and activities sometimes feel involuntarily engaged with no less a topic than the history of the world from 1856 to 1950. Fortunately, the long journey from beginning to completion of the Shaw: Interviews and Recollections project has not been a solitary one, and I am glad to acknowledge here the extensive assistance I have received from many individuals and institutions.

First, I must gratefully acknowledge the help of Mr Dan H. Laurence, who in the preliminary stages of research generously allowed me access to his bibliographical records of Shaw interviews, and gave me invaluable advice as to other sources of relevant materials. The editorial commentary in this work is everywhere indebted to Mr Laurence's scholarly editions of Shaw's letters and works and to his Bernard Shaw: A Bibliography. I am also much indebted to four people who have been employed as research assistants on the project at different stages of its development. Dr Simon Trezise assisted greatly with the early collection of materials in the United Kingdom. Dr Jeremy Steele had a long association with the project and made major contributions to the tasks of gathering, selection and organisation of materials, and to research for the editorial commentary. Dr Lyndy Abraham worked with admirable skill and expedition on the unearthing of numerous and often elusive items of information necessary for the completion of the commentary, carried out the checking of the final typescript and prepared the index to the work. Dr Bernadette Masters provided invaluable assistance in the correcting of the page proofs and the carrying out of other final editorial tasks. I am also grateful for the expert assistance given by the Macmillan editorial staff and Longworth Editorial Services.

Research for this work has been carried out in many institutions in the United Kingdom, the United States and Australia. I am especially grateful to the following for their help: the former Administrator-Registrar of the Royal Academy of Dramatic Art, Mr Richard O'Donoghue, for allowing access to the Currall Collection of newspaper cuttings about Shaw; the staff of the Southern Historical Collection and Manuscripts Department of the Library of the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill for access to the Henderson Collection; Mr Andrew Leigh, Administrator, the Old Vic; the staffs of: the British Library and the British Library Newspaper Library, Colindale; the Senate

House Library, University of London; the Theatre Museum, Victoria and Albert Museum; the Humanities Research Center, University of Texas at Austin; the New York Public Library; the Fisher Library, University of Sydney; the Macquarie University Library.

My thanks are due to the Australian Research Grants Scheme and the Macquarie University Research Grants Committee for financial support for the project, and to the Council of Macquarie University for granting me two periods of leave to enable me to carry out research.

From the beginning of the preparation of this work I have been deeply indebted to my wife, Donna, for help and well-judged advice.
