Thinking Diversely:
Hellenism and the Challenge of Globalisation

Guest Editor Elizabeth Kefallinos
The Modern Greek Studies Association of Australia and New Zealand (MGSAANZ) was founded in 1990 as a professional association by those in Australia and New Zealand engaged in Modern Greek Studies. Membership is open to all interested in any area of Greek studies (history, literature, culture, tradition, economy, gender studies, sexualities, linguistics, cinema, Diaspora etc.).

The Association issues a Newsletter (EvemSpWQJ), holds conferences and publishes two journals annually.

Editorial board
Vrasidas Karalis (University of Sydney)
Maria Herodotou (La Trobe University)
Panayota Nazou (University of Sydney)
D. Dracopoulos (The University of Sydney)
Panayiotis Diamadis (University of Technology)
Elizabeth Kefallinos (Macquarie University)

Membership and subscriptions (including annual subscription for 2 issues)
Individual:
AUS $40
US $35

Institutions:
AUS $70
US $70
EUR €50

Full-time students/pensioners:
AUS $20
US $30
EUR €30

Correspondence and payments
Department of Modern Greek, University of Sydney, NSW 2006 Australia
T (02) 9351 7252
F (02) 9351 3543
E-mail: vrasidas.karalis@sydney.edu.au

Please send submissions in Times New Roman 12pt, 1.5 spacing, single inverted commas for quotes, with endnotes rather than footnotes.

The periodical welcomes papers in both English and Greek on all aspects of Modern Greek Studies (broadly defined). Prospective contributors should preferably submit their papers on disk and hard copy. All published contributions by academics are refereed (standard process of blind peer assessment). This is a DEST recognised publication.

To περιοδικό φιλοξενεί άρθρα στα Αγγλικά και τα Ελληνικά σε όλα τα ανεξάρτητα τομεί των Μο dernGreek Studies (και άλλα καταδεικνυόμενα). Οι επιτροπές καταδεικνύουν ότι οι αρθρα περιοδικού εσται τετελεσμένα και περιεχομένα καταδεικνυόμενα. Αν και έλεγχος γίνεται με τον ίδιο τρόπο τα κείμενα και τα περιεχόμενα το περιοδικό είναι ένα από τα περιδίκα του ΔΕΣΤ.
Contents

PART 1
Introduction
Aspects of Greek Culture / p. 11
Special papers for Athens 2004 / p. 14
Elizabeth Kefallinos
The Night Boat to Ancona / p. 18
Martha Mylona

PART 2
History and Theology
Hellenistic globalisation and the metanarrative of the logos / p. 23
Mario Baghos
Tipping points: Greek culture in the years of internationalisation / p. 39
Vicky Karaiskou
What has Athens to do with Jerusalem? Greek Orthodoxy and the continuity of Hellenism / p. 53
Dimitri Kepreotes
Racing ahead to a globalized world: the Ptolemaic commonwealth and Posidippus’ Hippika / p. 71
Paul McKechnie
The Hellenism of Ammianus Marcellinus / p. 81
Alanna Nobbs

PART 3
Culture & Identity
Byzantine-Rite Christians (Melkites) in Central Asia in Late Antiquity and the Middle Ages / p. 91
Ken Parry
Ancient coins for the colonies: Hellenism and the history of numismatic collections in Australia / p. 109
Kenneth Sheedy
Greek-Cypriot settlement in South Australia during the 1950s / p. 123
Maria Shialis
An investigation into how Greek Cypriots throughout the Hellenic diaspora have been affected by the missing persons of Cyprus from the 1974 Turkish invasion / p. 133
Andrea Stylianou

PART 4
Education
Towards a multi-layered construct of identity by the Greek diaspora: an examination of the films of Nia Vardalos, including My Big Fat Greek Wedding and My Life in Ruins / p. 193
Mersina Tonys-Soulos
Switching channels between the old and new mentalities: exploring inter-generational changing expectations faced by Greek Orthodox clergy in their ministry in the Australian context / p. 207
Catherine Tsacalos
We are different and the same: exploring Hellenic culture and identity in Aotearoa-New Zealand / p. 223
Athena Helena Maria Gavriel

PART 5
Global Athens
Cosmopolitan orientation & creative resistance in contemporary Athenian culture / p. 241
Kyriaki Frantz
Sarantaris and Prometheus, the Idiot and the Thief / p. 261
Katherine Cassis
‘Get yer ya ya out’: aspects of Perth’s Greek Australian youth culture from the 1950s to the 1970s / p. 281
John N Yiannakis
The Greek diaspora in a globalised world / p. 293
George Kanarakis
Generations: ΤΕΝΙΕΣ / p. 303
Leonard Janiszewski and Effy Alexakis
Teaching the legacy of Hellenism in an Australian university – an interdisciplinary adventure / p. 319
Blanche Menadler
Greek language in the age of globalisation: A translator’s perspective / p. 341
Sophia Sakellis

Contributors / p. 394
Elizabeth Kefallinos
Macquarie University 26-11-2012

Introduction*

Aspects of Greek Culture

Over thousands of years Greek culture has spread across the globe to many people – through language, medicine and the sciences, philosophy, art, archaeology, architecture and politics; much of has been bestowed upon the world by Greek civilization. Greek culture has survived from the 3rd millennium BC when the original Hellenes first arrived in the area now known as Greece. Despite many wars, foreign occupations and other threats to its culture, Hellenism has persisted. Today however, we question its future. What do we mean today by the concept of Hellenism? How will Hellenism survive in a globalised world? The trends of speedy explorations, technology and the sciences as well as the minimisation of the concept of time and place, the unprecedented mobilisation of the populations and the rapid diversification of what were once perceived as exclusive national cultures have transformed the Globe into a village. As such, these circumstances have created new avenues by which to understand the world. Globalisation is paradoxical insofar as it restricts the world and at the same time effectuates a global dynamism. New trends construct new identities, and the need of a re-evaluation and redefinition of the Shelf is now paramount to many academic disciplines. The articles included in this publication well - project this attitude, encapsulating the concept of Hellenism in light of the contemporary concerns that relate to global realities.
Whilst exploring past, historical themes, the section entitled History and Theology is not without contemporary relevance insofar as it envisages aspect of Hellenism as global phenomena. Thus Hellenistic Globalisation and the Metanarratives of the Logos, articulates the current contradictions with globalisation in contrast to that of Christian antiquity. The author’s argument reveals that despite its claim of cultural and political integration, contemporary globalisation has assisted in the loss of metanarratives such as the Logos; metanarratives which, he suggests should be revived. Tipping Points: Greek culture in the age of Internationalisation, explores the theme of Art and its politicisation during the 1970s and beyond, as Greece’s position symbolically changed upon the European map. The article, What has Athens to do with Jerusalem? discusses the historical and religious connection between Athens and Jerusalem. The author explores the very long relationship of Hellenism with Greek Orthodoxy, both philosophically and historically, giving particular emphasis to the transformation from the pre-Christian to Christian era. Racing ahead to globalising world: The Hellenistic Commonwealth and Posidippus’ Hippike, relates the global Greek civilization of the post-Alexandrian world to the foundations of our contemporary globalised world. The author’s proposition that Hellenic kingdoms actively sought legitimacy and validation through maintenance and reinforcement of Greek institutions and values is well established through his focus on a selected text from the poet Posidippus’ Hippike. The author of The Hellenism of Ammianus Marcellinus focuses upon the personality of Marcellinus by giving particular emphasis to his love of Hellenism; although a noble Roman, Marcellinus wanted to be remembered as “former soldier of a Greek”, a statement that uncovers his admiration of Hellenism during the powerful, Roman era. Byzantine – Rite Christians (Melkites) in Central Asia in Late Antiquity and the Middle Ages, presents a comprehensive, historical overview of the presence of Byzantine-rite Christians, in Central Asia, an article which has often been neglected within early Christian studies. In the article, Ancient Coins for the Colonies: Hellenism and the History of Numismatic Collections in Australia, the author observes global Hellenism through a history of numismatic collections; he successfully develops a cultural connection between Greece and Australian (the imperial colony) and links it to the concept of Hellenism within the era of contemporary Globalisation. The Greek – Cypriot Settlement to South Australia during the 1950s, concentrates on the contemporary presence of Greek-Cypriots in South Australia, and as such provides a springboard for further investigation into their settlement in that particular state. Update on the missing persons of Cyprus from the 1974 Turkish invasion, is an original piece of work that investigates the geo-political and historical position of Cyprus in its globalised dimensions. The inherent ongoing political agendas interwoven within the humanitarian issue of “missing people” is the central theme and it is the basis of a much larger piece of research which investigates the shifting tides of international, political tensions and alliances during the last four decades. Darwinism and its Impact in the Recent Greek Press, discusses the concept of Darwinism as depicted in the process of journalism in the daily press.

The second section includes papers whose focus is on culture and identity, popular themes that pervade interdisciplinary studies as a means of exploring today’s multidimensional identities. A generation (Τους Δεκα) presents a number of Greek-Australians, or those of Greek descent, reflecting upon their forebears, and/or their succeeding generations, as well as upon themselves revealing – through cross – comparison – insightful personal, socio-cultural and political layers across time. The Greek Diaspora in a Globalised World, offers a thorough investigation of the term Diaspora, and in the process discusses the dynamics of Greek diaspora historically and geographically. Sarantitis and Prometheus, the Idiot and the Thief, nourishes and develops further understanding of the work and thought of one of Greece’s significant, but not very well-known, poets of the early 20th century Greece. Multiple, Intergenerational Identities: Greek-Australian Women across Generations, explore the multiplicity of identity in three generations of women in Australia; oral narratives reflect a self-defined process and development of identities that exist within a continues flux of re-evaluation and redefinition; it also reflects the process of transformation from first generation migrant to third generation Australian-born women. The author of Cosmopolitan orientation & creative resistance in contemporary Athenian culture, focus on the free press magazine Lifo to reveal the dialectic between global and local culture in Athens; it also includes the then-emerging economic crisis in Greece and its effects upon the “cosmopolitan orientation and creative resistance” in Athens. We are different and the same: Exploring Hellenic culture and identity in Aotearoa- New Zealand, adds valuably to our understanding of the multidimensional qualities of cultural identities, from the local, to the global; the author explores the dynamic complexities that generate and regenerate cultural identity in both positive and negative light. Towards a multi-layered construction of identity by the Greek Diaspora: an examination of the films of Nia Vardalos, including “My Big Fat Greek wedding” (2002) and “My life in Ruins” (2009), presents an attempt to investigate the multiple layered metaphor of “identity” within the context of Nia Vardalos’ films. What this paper offers is of relevance and immediacy to current contemporary thinking on the transformative nature (empowerment/disempowerment) of identity. Switching Channels between the old and new mentalities: Exploring inter-generational changing expectations faced by Greek Orthodox their ministry in Australia, deals with a growing – and indeed, often overlooked- area of research into the Greek-Australian experience in the area of the Greek Orthodox Church; it exposes the inter-generational complexities encountered by Greek Orthodox priests and their wives in congregations containing both “old” and “new” outlooks (towards the Church, its priests and their perceived roles and responsibilities).

The last section entitled Education incorporates papers that deal with education in regard to the “legacy of Hellenism”. Hellenism is often relegated to Ancient History studies in both high school and tertiary education; a reductionist approach which envisages its legacy as part of distant – and for this reason – mystic past, and which is not easy to overcome. Teaching the legacy of Hellenism in an Australian University – an interdisciplinary adventure, exposes the process of teaching this “legacy of Hellenism” at the level of tertiary education, particularly within the International Studies Department at Macquarie University. Greek language in the age of Globalisation: The translator’s perspective, explores translations and their problematic as a mean of communication within the global context.

Special papers for Athens 2004
Athens became a global city during the Olympics of 2004 and beyond; significantly Athens became a global symbol when the Olympic torch passed through the streets of the most important Olympic cities, including Sydney.
The relay from Olympia to the stadium of Athens marks, for the “first time ever” the flame’s globetrotting around the world, in order to disseminate the message of unity, peace and ekecheiria (Olympic Truce). It is in this framework that some distinguished historians, philosophers and philologists, from Macquarie, Sydney and Charles Sturt Universities came together to celebrate the Olympic city of Athens for one day conference entitled Athens Day Conference - A day for all things Athenian (31st of July, 2004). The event also highlighted the 40th anniversary since the foundation of Macquarie University, and as such, explored the apollonian light of Olympism, spiritual armonia and noble competition as encapsulated within Greek Studies and at Macquarie University’s former emblem, light house – a symbol of knowledge, innovation and distinguished scholarship – (that is, another way to disseminate Hellenism in the era of harsh Globalisation). The one- day conference attracted ten distinguished scholars; a selection of the presented papers, included in this publication: Images of Greek Goddess in Aneme: Athena and Nausicaa of the Valley of Wind, examines the formation of Miyazaki’s Nausicaa in visual, psychological and cross-cultural contexts whilst at the same time exposing the Japanese appreciation of Greek mythology in both artistic and literary creations. The Impact of Athens on the Development of the Greek Language and the Ancient Letters discusses the significance of Athens in antiquity as a centre of knowledge. The paper reveals the remarkable development that took place in Athens in every aspect of human thought; the author gives however emphasis to the role of the Greek language as a mean that transferred the knowledge of the great Greek minds to the rest of the world until today. Athena, diamond-jewelled, ring of the Earth: A Poem about Athens or Athens as a Poem? In the light of Athens as an Olympic city that attracted the interest of the globe in the 2004, the author of this paper explores the Greek literary universe in order to sightsee the way that poets create an artistic image of Athens; thus the question that is proposed and discussed in this paper is Palamas’ hymn for Athens: is the hymn of Athens one of the national poems created only to enhance the nationalistic conscience of the Greek people, as many scholars believe, or did Palamas create, poetically, a personal image of Athens?

The papers presented in this volume are interactive, diverse, synchronic and diachronic. The contributors redefine Hellenism in the age of globalisation within various disciplines. It seems that Hellenism is no longer a monolithic aspect of scholarship but an ongoing process able to absorb the multiplicity of novel, cultural aspects. Greek studies has emerged from its traditional introversion into the dynamic arena of a globalized extroversion. It has expanded successfully into various other fields making it interdisciplinary in nature and diverse in notion. Interdisciplinary process gives to Greek studies a fresh breath which pushes it forward into new areas of scientific research, as well as teaching and learning. From the contributions of this volume the creative dialogue that Greek studies has initiated with the past, namely between antiquity and early Christianity with the present, has been made evident. Until recently antiquity exclusively belonged to a scholarship which did not permit - or have a place - for a dialogue with the present; which means that a creative dialogue with the past gives a new dimension to Greek studies. Greek studies is not longer a dead past but a living, creative force which enlightens the past and fertilizes the present. Also, a creative dialogue is evident with diverse social and cultural dynamics. Greek scholars in the Diaspora appreciate the scientifically productive dialogue between the past and contemporary scholarship which allows them in turn to engage in an innovative exchange of ideas, develop diversification, and conceptualize an enriched construction of a hybrid Greek-Australian identity that is unique and promising for posterity. Hellenism certainly is not limited to Greeks inherently lends itself to an expansion which encompasses individuals from all over the world. In its renowned Greekness it is not identified with the limited boarders of a place, namely Greece but is amplified, enhanced and fertilized by new elements, new routes, new minds unaffected from distactive constructions. Hellenism constantly re-invents whilst preserving its initial nature and it is this paradoxical stability and flexibility that has allowed it to survive throughout the centuries as a continuous, re-creative process. Hellenism is that notion which is maintained and promulgated by all those individuals - such as the contributors of this volume - who study, research, teach Greek, or even find a personal, existential meaning in its humane values. The various thematic contributions within this volume prove that Hellenism has a bright future in the Diaspora.

*The articles in the present edition have been selected from peer reviewed papers that were originally presented at the 15th International Conference of Modern Greek Studies Association Australia and New Zealand, at Macquarie University, in December 2010.
The Night Boat to Ancona

The red grapes hang heavy above the Italian lovers’ balcony in Nicopolis*, their dew droplets glisten in the moonlight.
The heat has quenched itself, mellowing in the arms of the night.
The scent of the night jasmine fused with the passion and insomnia of the cicadas,
waking from an eight year slumber,
too long the wait,
the air a frenzy of mating calls.

Further up by the Gates at the Acheron river, Pluto, silent
but deadly,
keeps his cool, waiting...

The midnight boat to Ancona,
a chandelier all lit up,
sails by silently,
gliding on the Ionian sea,
vanishing into a starry darkness,
leaving behind a vacuum of night,
of emptiness.
A loss.

In the woods the tourists frolic merrily;
shrieks and the breaking of bottles
pierce the night,
punctuating the cicadas’ concert.
A night owl startled flies past crying out in a tone
one might wrongly interpret as despair.

Despair, is this what Antony felt here, in the hills of Actium, measuring himself against Octavian and Rome?
Do the hills remember the echoes of his lost battle?
Do the old olive trees still carry the cry in their rings?
Do the shells, the pebbles under my feet, hide deep inside, the memory of Cleopatra’s ships leaving him?
Do the waves bring it ashore,
whispering it,
again and again?
Do they?

And all along, down south in the African heat Alexandria — implacable,
an end waiting—
peering through its windows, nonchalant,
languid,
for Antony’s return
and his farewell.

*Nicopolis - an ancient city, north of Actium, founded by the Roman emperor Augustus (Octavian), in 31 BC, to commemorate his victory, in the battle of Actium, over Mark Antony and Queen Cleopatra of Egypt. The ruins are near Preveza in Western Greece.
Kenneth Sheedy
Macquarie University

Ancient coins for the colonies: Hellenism and the history of numismatic collections in Australia

In memory of Maria Varvaressos

Abstract

This article has its origins in some reflections on an earlier era in a rather different world. But they do eventually lead to Australia and to the processes of globalization which are such a salient feature of contemporary life in Australia. Here I want to explore something of the creation of private collections of ancient Greek coins in Australia and their subsequent fate. At first glance this topic would appear to have a distinctly local ring to it, that perhaps jars with the theme of ‘Hellenism in a Globalised World’. But the import of ancient Greek coins into Australia can be understood in terms of a long held European practice of collecting antiquities (and in particular coins), that was encouraged by Hellenism. In this context collections of ancient coins came to represent the acquisition of an education which privileged knowledge of the classical world (Bowen 1989). In the Renaissance, coins were collected as bearers of authentic (and securely dated) portraits and thus valued as a means of providing direct contact with the great men of antiquity (Haskell 1993; Weiss 1973; Stahl 2009). The vast numbers available meant that (in contrast to other sources of images – such as statues) coins could be collected by many people, and not only in Italy or Greece but throughout Europe.¹

Introduction

Coins thus formed a medium by which knowledge of the ancient world was widely disseminated through many levels of (educated) European society. With the formation of European national museums in the eighteenth century some of the largest royal and aristocratic coin collections passed into the public domain to serve the purposes of public education. During the nineteenth century we can also see the emergence of auction houses and dealers catering for a demand in ancient coins from a wider public around the world whose standards of living, income and education had risen significantly after the Industrial Revolution. The ‘Hellenism’ which promoted the focus on Greek material culture (as an aid to learning) is arguably in good part responsible for the current global distribution of ancient Greek coins (Clarke 1989).

The dispersal of ancient Greek artefacts is hardly a modern (or Renaissance) phenomenon; it was already underway with the spread of Greek colonists around the Mediterranean, especially during the Hellenistic period (late 4th–1st centuries BC), and reached untold heights with the Roman conquests. The import of items of Greek culture was common to many western countries during the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries as they built up the resources of their museums and institutions of learning, and this has been well documented (Jenkins 1992). The processes involved in the transfer of ancient objects might today be described as global – and here I refer to the on-going movement of objects, sometimes on a massive scale, from one community to the private homes and state institutions of another. This has gone on over the centuries and now is worldwide.

We tend to think of the trade in antiquities as being responsible for this circulation but we should not forget the transfer of property held by refugees and migrants. In this article, I plan to focus on the private experience, for Australia’s early museums were relatively few and (with one exception) their interest in antiquities was negligible. The creation of collections of ancient Greek coins in Australia reflects the colonial history of Australia – for it was a means by which the white settlers demonstrated and reproduced their ties with Europe. Hellenism in this context may also be linked to a distinctly English fascination with ancient Greece, having emerged in the late 18th century, and then becoming a feature of an English public school education (Bowen 1989).

Ancient coins are the most common Greek antiquity in private hands around the world. They are the most common ancient artefacts in Australian museums. There are an estimated 3–4,000 Greek coins in Australian public collections and until recently they were nearly all unpublished and very largely unknown. In an essay accompanying the catalogue of the 1992 exhibition The First Collections. The Public Library and the National Gallery of Victoria in the 1850s and 1860s, Ann Galbally noted that as colonial Australians had to establish, fund and maintain any public enterprise, such as a museum or library, ‘individual determination had to be unshakable, the collective desire needed to be strong and the participation rate high’ (Galbally 1992: 8). But the various forms this determined effort took in terms of public institutions and their policies took an unfortunate turn. A popular desire to make learning and knowledge available to all, in line with the democratic stirrings and the utilitarian belief in progress typical of the nineteenth century, led to the almost slavish following of what was considered the best of contemporary British approaches and models (Galbally 1992). Colonial art collectors, private and public, developed a ‘mania’ for copies (Inglis 1992a). It seemed everyone wanted their own copies of well-known British or European paintings and statues, and with these went a small tidal wave of replicas in the decorative arts, including coins (Inglis 1992b). Australian museums and libraries, if they were at all interested in ancient coins, were likely to purchase electrotypeds of famous examples held in the British Museum rather than originals of lesser significance – Inglis (1992b) noted recommendations in the 1850s for the purchase of ‘sulphur casts’ by the Public Library of Melbourne. In this article I wish to look at four private collectors in Australia who took an interest in original Greek coins, and to suggest that each in their different ways represents a Hellenism that is recognizable in terms of trends evident elsewhere in the world.

1. J.J. Eugene von Guerard (1812–1901)

Johann Joseph Eugene von Guerard is best known today as a Viennese artist who produced some of the finest landscape paintings of colonial Australia. A modern survey of his life and work is now provided by the 2011 exhibition and catalogue essays from the National Gallery of Victoria, Eugene von Guerard: Nature Revealed (Pullin 2011b). After his training and early career as a painter in Italy and Germany von Guerard joined the gold rush in Victoria. He arrived in 1852 and went on to the goldfields at Ballarat but failed to make his fortune and soon returned to painting. Most of his subsequent commissions came from wealthy property owners wanting paintings of their estates but he also found time to join exploratory expeditions organized by scientists and geologists, and in this context he recorded with great precision some of the most dramatic features of Australia’s landscape, notably the Australian Alps and its highest peak, Mt Kosciuszko (Pullin 2011a). In 1870 he was appointed the first Master of Painting at the National School of Art, Melbourne, and Curator of the National Gallery of Victoria. Among his students were Frederick McCubbin (1855–1917) and Thomas (Tom) William (1856–1931). In 1871 he also became the first curator of the numismatic collection of the Victorian Public Library (Sharples 1986). As John Sharples (1986: 39) has noted in his history of this collection, while Von Guerard was curator there he wrote a three volume catalogue of his own collection (unpublished); with Volume I given over to ancient Greek, Roman and Byzantine coins. In 1881 von Guerard sold his coins to the Public Library of Victoria (Sharples 1986: 39). Sharples (1986: 40) has observed that with the addition of von Guerard’s own coins the Library’s collection was increased to a respectable total of 3,387 pieces (1171 were ancient).

Von Guerard began collecting coins before coming to Australia. But it also seems clear from his catalogue that most of his coins were acquired while in Australia (and in Melbourne). At least seven of the estimated nineteen non-Australian sources that he lists in these volumes are located in cities in Italy. A notable German source was the famous classical numismatist E. Julius Friedlander who became director of the Münzkabinett of the Staatliche Museen zu Berlin in 1868; this may well have been a personal contact. Von Guerard arguably collected his Greek and Roman coins as original examples of ancient art. In a letter from his friend Thomas Duckett in 1867 von Guerard is said to have “gathered together coins that illustrate the art of every period” (Duckett 1867; Sharples 2011). The acquisition and study of ancient art was a common practice among European artists operating in Italy. One thinks here, for example, of the antiquities acquired by the famous Danish neo-classical sculptor Bertel Thorvaldsen, whose fine collection of ancient coins is on exhibition in his museum in Copenhagen (Morkholm 1982).

Although usually modest in value, von Guerard’s ancient coins evidently constitute the first collection of antiquities to reach the colonies. It was certainly the first collection to be recorded; though it was soon overtaken by the much more impressive antiquities collection of Charles Nicholson, acquired during a grand tour in 1856–57 and presented to the University of Sydney in 1860; though, it seems to have held no coins. Von Guerard’s coins were probably among the first ancient Greek artefacts (if not the first) to be acquired by Victoria. It went against museum policy, which was to buy replicas. The early administrators of the library had been urged by Professor McCoy of Melbourne University to purchase ‘sulphur casts of the great European collections of coins for historical study’, and among the first purchases (10 April 1862) were casts of Roman coins (Inglis 1992b: 93). As noted above, the purchase of casts was a key trend in the nascent collections of the new colonies. Part of von Guerard’s collection was put on exhibition in the library but it has remained unpublished. On reflection we can see that this early contact with ancient Greece was quickly buried and forgotten.

2. A.B. Triggs (1868–1936)

Arthur Bryan Triggs, a successful grazier, was born in London in 1868 and migrated to Sydney in 1887 (Walsh 1990; Ives 2003). After spending time from 1888 as an accountant with the Bank of New South Wales at its Yass branch he decided to go into pastoralism and investment on his own. He proceeded to purchase some 25 sheep stations, which held as many as half a million sheep at one time (Vivian and Noble 1985). In addition to sheep his great wealth enabled him to acquire collections of art, furniture, books, manuscripts, fine lace and coins (Ives 2003; Vivian and Noble 1985). He wanted to open a Charles Dickens Museum in Yass, but struggled to get enough items (Ives 2003; Vivian and Noble 1985). Perhaps the best known work from Triggs’ collection today is an 1881 painting of Helen of Troy by the distinguished Victorian artist Sir Edward John Poynter. This fine example of late nineteenth century Hellenism now resides in the Art Gallery of New South Wales, which purchased the painting after the death of Triggs and the auction of all but one of his collections at the request of his widow. In a recent study Elizabeth Bollen has suggested that the jewellery worn by Helen in this painting was linked with jewellery found by Schliemann at Troy (and modelled by Sophia Schliemann in a famous photograph of these Bronze Age finds) (Bollen 2010). At this point we might stop to reflect that Australia was without wealthy cultural benefactors until the early 20th century; the first and greatest, Alfred Felton (benefactor to the National Gallery of Victoria), died in 1904. Even in the twentieth century relatively few notable private collections came to Australian public institutions.
In the Australian Dictionary of Biography, Walsh (1990) described Triggs as 'very much the cultivated and courteous Englishman'. His interests in antiquity fit into this pattern. He bought Greek coins because this is what an educated Englishman would acquire to accompany his reading of the classics. He was sufficiently proud of his coin collection to commission a printed catalogue from Spink and Son Ltd (1924), one of the leading coin dealers in London, and probably the main source of his material (presumably his coins had to be sent to London for this exercise). Unfortunately, the catalogue, which appeared in 1924, was unillustrated (Spink and Son Ltd 1924). There were 140 Greek coins (including coins from the Roman Provincial period), and two from Persia. He further collected some 180 Roman Republican and over 300 Roman Imperial coins. The collection was then completed by over 400 coins illustrating the history of Great Britain – it ends with a 1912 farthing minted under George V. Among the most important Greek pieces were a silver decadrachm from Syracuse signed by the engraver Euainetos and minted at the end of the fifth century BC (Spink and Son Ltd 1924; cat 92), and a gold octadrachm from Ptolemaic Egypt depicting Queen Arsinoe II and minted shortly after her death in 270 BC during the reign of Ptolemy VI (Spink and Son Ltd 1924; cat 110). It is hard to avoid the impression from the presentation of the book and its contents that the traditions of Greek and Roman coins were here believed to continue in the numismatic history of Britain. There are no coins of the various branches of the royal mint operating in the Australian colonies (for the minting of gold) or of the Australian mint after Federation.

In 1938, after the death of Triggs, his widow Mrs May Triggs presented his Greek and Roman coin collection to the Nicholson Museum at Sydney University (Trendall 1948). The donation came about through the intervention of the noted theologian Dr Samuel Angus, who held a chair of theology at St Andrews College and was also an early curator at the Nicholson (Trendall 1948). This gave the museum the largest and most important collection of ancient coins in the country. Given the lack of interest in ancient art, and the pronounced taste for replicas instead of originals, the Triggs holding of coins was probably the most important private collection of antiquities in Australia at that time. The Nicholson Museum itself could boast a fine set of electrotype copies of important Greek coins in the British Museum (Trendall 1948). In 1962 the exhibition of the Trigg coins at the museum was robbed. The surviving Triggs coins remain unpublished.

My third subject, perhaps the best known of all four men, is James Rivers Barrington Stewart; he is described in the Australian Dictionary of Biography as an 'archaeologist, numismatist and gentleman farmer' (Merrilles 1967, 1984, 1994; Blunt 2002). The son of a wealthy New South Wales property owner, he was educated at Cambridge. He eventually became a senior lecturer (under A.D. Trendall) in the new department of archaeology at the University of Sydney in 1949, and finally Edwin Cuthbert Hall Professor of Middle Eastern Archaeology in 1960.

From 1951 Stewart lived in, and farmed an estate (Abercrombie House) at Mount Pleasant, near Bathurst. He treated his home as an extension of the department of archaeology and his students (who found him a difficult man) were expected to spend time at the forty room mansion which housed his exceptional research library (ultimately bought by the University of Sydney for Fisher Library) as well as his extensive collections of antiquities. He served as director of the Melbourne Cyprus expedition, and the wealth of Bronze and Iron Age Cypriot pottery currently in public museums around Australia is the result of local subscriptions to this enterprise.

Stewart's greatest passion was certainly numismatics; he built up an impressive collection which included the finest holding of medieval Cypriot coins in the world, but he was also interested in Rome, Byzantium and the Crusades (Blunt 2002). For many years he laboured over an elaborate treatise on the Lusignan history and coinage of medieval Cyprus (AD 1192-1474) but it would not see the light of day until posthumously published by the Bank of Cyprus in 2001 (Stewart 2002). At the time of Stewart's death he had amassed a collection in excess of 1,500 Lusignan coins. This was in large part due to his purchase of specimens from four important hoards found on Cyprus which were acquired through export licences from the Cypriot Department of Antiquities (Metcalfe 2002). Stewart died in 1962 at the age of 48. In reviewing the 2001 publication, D.M. Metcalfe from the Ashmolean Museum noted that his work showed signs of 'numismatic isolation' (Metcalfe 2002: xxiii). Nonetheless, he was the first noteworthy numismatist in the country.
Although he served as president of the Numismatic Society of New South Wales it is not clear if he made any effort to develop the numismatic collection of the Nicholson Museum at the University of Sydney. After his premature death Stewart’s own numismatic collection was sold overseas (though at the time attempts were made to buy it for Sydney’s Museum of Applied Arts and Sciences). The Ashmolean Museum now holds almost 80 of his Cypriot coins. It would thus seem that little numismatic evidence of Stewart’s great love of Cyprus would survive in Australia. On the death of his widow in 2007 the few remains of Stewart’s numismatic articles and coins were very generously bequeathed to the Australian Centre for Ancient Numismatic Studies at Macquarie University. By a strange twist of fate these included an envelope with two coins that had been personal keepsakes of his wife. The first is a tenth of a daric minted by Evagoras I of Salamis in the years between 411 and 373 BC showing Heracles on one side and a goat on the other. The second is a twelfth of a daric minted by Menelaos of Salamis between 310 and 306 BC (Markou 2011).

4. W.L. Gale (1934–2007)

The final figure in this survey is Dr William Gale (Sheedy 2008a, 2008b). Bill Gale was the key figure in the emergence of ancient numismatics as a research focus supported by Australian universities. He was also the first major donor of Mediterranean antiquities to an Australian institution since Nicholson in 1860. In 1999 Dr Gale provided the funds to establish an endowment at Macquarie University in order to fund the Australian Centre for Ancient Numismatic Studies (ACANS). At the same time he lent the Centre his collection of some 3,000 coins so that it might have a strong resource base for teaching and research from the outset. This collection was given to the Centre in his will.

Bill Gale’s undergraduate studies in ancient history at Macquarie University gave him the knowledge necessary to build up world class coin collections in his chosen fields. A family fortune derived from property development in Sydney gave him the means to purchase coins from auctions and sales around the world. He decided that he would confine his efforts to three areas that were linked by his passion for Italy: the Greek cities of South Italy, Roman Republic Coinage and the Emperor Hadrian. The first of these collections (some 1267 coins from South Italy) was published in 2008 as Syllage Nummorum Graecorum Australia I (Sheedy 2008b). It is one of the finest collections of South Italian coins in the world, and rivals all but the very largest public collections. Bill himself published one small monograph on these coins, The Sacred Tripod. Kroton and its Coins (Gale 1995). ACANS, which continues to develop its holdings, now has the largest public collection of ancient coins in Australia.

Bill Gale began his studies as a lawyer (having taken his degree at the University of Sydney), and Roman law was a key theme in his undergraduate and postgraduate studies in ancient history when he turned to Macquarie University after his retirement from business. Italy was central to his conception of the ancient world. The Greek coins he acquired detailed the colonisation of South Italy. It is probably not worth attempting to evoke parallels between Australia and the Greek colonies of Italy but the theme is suggestive. Hellenism here is combined with the processes of the diaspora and colonialism. Bill Gale was not an aesthete; he was a dogged student of history. He recognised that there was little to connect Australian collectors of ancient coins with the study of the subject. At the same time he believed that numismatics was largely ignored in the modern teaching of ancient history, especially in Australia. So he also became the first collector of ancient coins and antiquities to build his collections with the intention of having an impact on the teaching of ancient history in this country.

Conclusion

At the beginning of this article I indicated that I was primarily interested in Hellenism not as an academic or institutional pursuit but as a concern that could be detected in private lives from different eras of Australian society. The growing numbers of Greek migrants into Australia, especially after the Second World War, brought a new awareness of Mediterranean societies, but there is little sign that it resulted in a public interest in collecting antiquities or ancient coins, or with one exception, that it had any impact on the antiquities collections of cultural institutions. The one exception is Professor Alexander Cambitoglou and the members of the societies he organized around the Nicholson Museum for the purpose of funding purchases of antiquities (mostly ancient Attic and South Italian pottery) (Potts and Sowada 2004).

The picture that remains is mixed. There was limited interest in antiquities among the administrators of the emerging institutions of the colonies, Von Guerard brought to Melbourne the interests and tastes of a Viennese artist, but these were not generally shared by his audience of Anglo-Saxon migrants. His coins, which I have suggested were prized as examples of the arts of antiquity, largely disappeared into the public library of Melbourne
. What became of other early private art collections in the colonies and the newly founded Commonwealth of Australia?

The Melbourne numismatist John Sharples once noted that Australia lacked the noble houses and their collections which today form the basis of the great numismatic holdings in European national museums (Sharples 1986: 38). But should we conclude that there were no significant collections in Australia during the nineteenth and early twentieth centuries? The population size of Australia until after WWII was small (in 1900 there were only some three and three quarter million people), yet in the boom years of the 1870s and 1880s Australia was the leading producer of wool in the world; it was a very prosperous time for the landowning elite. Hellenism in the private sphere of wealthy Australians arguably came through the prism of an English conception of a good education, and English gentlemen collected coins and cameos (Redford 2008).

The collections of Triggs suggest that Greek antiquities and Greek coins might be included as part of the environment in which an educated Australian lived (and which informed his self-identity). Undoubtedly a lot of private wealth spent in this direction went on copies of famous works. James Stewart, a wealthy landowner in the New South Wales countryside and professor of archaeology was the first important numismatist in the country. His interest in coins straddled the private and the public spheres, though his medieval Cypriot coin collection was a personal possession and passion.25 On his death his coins were nearly all sold overseas. It is unclear exactly when Dr Gale began planning to give his coin collections to a university and to establish a numismatic research centre, though it is evident that these plans developed while he was building his collections. His Hellenism undoubtedly came from a devotion to Rome. Each of the four collections examined reflects their owner’s different resources and opportunities as well as their particular interests, but Dr Gale was able to take advantage of a much more globalized market.

In each case these Australian collectors shared in a Hellenism explored through coins. The movement of ancient artefacts to Australia was a corollary of European settlement. It was part of the material culture of an educated European elite. The continued circulation of ancient coins is now driven by a more globalized interest in the material culture of ancient societies (for various purposes, including investment) and has less to do with an engagement with Hellenism.

References
Coinage, Nicosia: Bank of Cyprus Cultural Foundation, pp. xxxi–xii.

Bollen, Elizabeth (2010), 'Hellen's Jewels: From Homer to Schliemann and Pymter', in Bollen, Elizabeth (ed.), Beauty & Betrayal: Ancient and New-Classical Jewellery, Sydney:
Nicholson Museum, pp. 7–11.

Bowen, James (1989), 'Education, ideology and the ruling class: Hellenism and English public schools in the nineteenth century', in Clarke, G.W. (ed.), Rediscovering Hellenism;
The Hellenic Inheritance and the English Imagination Cambridge: Cambridge University

Du’clette, Thomas (1867), Letter April 12, 1867, Thomas Dueclette Articles, Preston, UK:
Harris Museum and Art Gallery.

Galbally, Anne (1992), 'For the Instruction and Amusement of the Inhabitants', in A. Galbally and A. Ingles (eds.) with C. Downer and T. Lane, The First Collections. The Public Library and the National Gallery of Victoria in the 1850s and 1860s, Melbourne:
University of Melbourne Museum of Art, pp. 8–29.

Haskell, Francis (1993), History and its Images: Art and the Interpretation of the Past,
New Haven: Yale University Press.

Ingles, Alison (1992a), 'A Mania for Copies', in A. Galbally and A. Ingles (eds.) with C.
Downer and T. Lane, The First Collections. The Public Library and the National Gallery of Victoria in the 1850s and 1860s, Melbourne: University of Melbourne Museum of Art, pp.
31–37.

Ingles, Alison (1992b), 'Coins, Medals and Impressions of Scales', in A. Galbally and A.
Ingles (eds.) with C. Downer and T. Lane, The First Collections. The Public Library and the National Gallery of Victoria in the 1850s and 1860s, Melbourne: University of Melbourne Museum of Art, pp. 93–98.

Ives, Alan (2003), 'Tracking A.B. Triggs and his collections', Margin: Life & Letters in Early Australia, Nov. 2003, pp. 22–35.

Jenkins, Ian (1992), Archaeologists and Aesthetes in the Sculpture Galleries of the British

Australian Dictionary of Biography, vol. 2, Melbourne: Melbourne University Press,

Markou, Evangelia (2011), 'L’or des royes de Chypre. Numismatique et histoire à l’époque classique', ΜΕΘΕΘΜΑΤΑ 64, Athens.

Acknowledgements

I wish to thank Dr E. Kefallinos, the convenor of the 10th Biennial Conference of the Modern Greek Studies Association, Australia and New Zealand, Hellenism in the Globalised World, 9–12 December 2010, Macquarie University, for suggesting that I present a paper (on which the present article is based). I wish to thank Mr John Sharples, the former Curator of Numismatics at the Museum of Victoria, for his advice and assistance with the study of the numismatic career of Eugène von Guérard. For his valued assistance I also wish to thank Assoc. Professor Ted Nixon.

Notes

1 The most important collections were formed by members of the great houses of Europe but the lesser nobility, merchants and members of the church also took an interest in coins.

2 Louis XIV, who inherited the collection of his uncle, Gaston d’Orléans, began the Cabinet du Roi which was the predecessor of the Cabinet des Médailles which now houses the French national numismatic collection and is a department of the Bibliothèque nationale de France.

3 See the various companies and auctions listed in Ancient Coin Auction Catalogues 1880–1980 (Spring 2009). Sotheby’s (London) earliest known coin auction occurred on the 11th February, 1755 (Spring 2009: 287), and in Paris, Rollin and Feuardent were issuing fixed price lists by 1808 (Spring 2009: 216).

4 The ancient Greek coins in Australian public collections are currently being surveyed by the author as part of the Sylloge Nummorum Graecorum Australia project.

5 This part of his collection apparently cost the artist £293.19.3. Dr Sharples has suggested to me that it might also have been an estimate of value by the author at the time of sale to the library. See also John Sharples (2011), ‘The Coin Collector’, in Pullin (2011b), Eugène von Guérard, pp. 242–243.

6 In the catalogue there is, for example, reference to an Athenian tetradrachm from the collection of Baron von Broedel (7) that was acquired with the help of Friedlander.

7 Note Thorvaldsen’s relationship in Rome with the Danish numismatist Georg Zöeig.
Maria Shialis
Flinders University

Greek-Cypriot settlement in South Australia during the 1950s

Abstract

The article investigates the settlement of Greek-Cypriot migrants in South Australia during the 1950s. The aim is to examine the experiences of Greek-Cypriot migrants, and look at established groups in the Greek-Cypriot community, to have understanding of the social structure and the mechanisms that helped migrants settle into an Anglo-Celtic Australian society. This article will utilize first hand experiences, and document individual and group accounts, which otherwise would have been lost. By documenting these accounts, the paper will be a useful resource for future research done on this minority group, but will also fill in gaps in our history.

Introduction

This article intends to examine the experiences of Greek-Cypriot migrants, in order to have an understanding of the social structure and the mechanisms that helped migrants settle into an Anglo-Celtic Australian society. Oral history was utilised as the method of research because it provided a suitable means to capture the unique experiences. The data is derived from interviews conducted on a pool of ten people. The interview pool was gathered on the grounds of those who were Greek-Cypriot and migrated to South Australia in the 1950s. It must be taken into consideration that the study does not intend to discriminate between age, gender or background of candidates. Furthermore, it does not propose to speak for the whole Greek-
Contributors

Mr Mario Baghos
mario.baghos@students.mq.edu.au
Mario Baghos is a PhD candidate in Ancient History at Macquarie University. In 2009, he was awarded both the Rev Dr Brian Murray and Diane Fearney Memorial Prizes for his undergraduate degree in theology. In 2010, he was awarded First Class Honours, sharing the Dr Beth Blackall Memorial Prize for the highest grade in a graduate level thesis. He is associate teacher in Early Byzantine History at St Andrew's Greek Orthodox Theological College.

Dr Mio Bryce
mio.bryce@mq.edu.au
Mio Bryce is the head of Japanese Studies at Macquarie University. Her research interests include historical, sociological and psychological issues depicted in literature. She currently involved in interdisciplinary research into youth cultures, with particular focus on manga and anime, in conjunction with English Department at Macquarie University.

Ms Katherine Cassis
katherine.cassis@sydney.edu.au
Ms Katherine Cassis teaches Modern Greek at the Department of Modern Greek Studies, The University of Sydney. She is currently in the process of completing her doctoral dissertation at the same university. She taught Modern Greek for seven years at Macquarie University, for three years at the Australian National University and has presented a series of lectures at the Open University of Sydney. Ms Cassis has contributed to conferences and regularly participates in the postgraduate seminars organized by the Department of Modern Greek at the University of Sydney. She has published various articles and is in the process of preparing a translation of the poetic and philosophical works of George Sarantaris into English.

Dr Kyriaki Frantz
kyriaki.frantz@mq.edu.au
Dr Kyriaki Frantz is a lecturer in Greek studies seconded by the Greek Ministry of Education in Australian universities since 2003. Her research areas are gender, performance, and Greek language and culture. She holds a Masters in the History and Economy of the Mediterranean and a PhD in the History of Women in Science.

Dr Athena Gavriel
athena.gavriel@paradise.net.nz
Athena Gavriel is a New Zealand born Greek and Cypriot. She has 35 years experience as a mental health psychiatric nurse, completed a BA in anthropology and PhD in Nursing. "We are all different and the same. Culture, identity and mental health: Worldviews, wellbeing and health-illness experiences of Helens in Aotearoa New Zealand." Her research and clinical practice interests include culture, identity and mental health.

Mr Leonard Janiszewski
leonard.janiszewski@mq.edu.au
Historian, Leonard Janiszewski, and documentary photographer, Billy Aliaksak, have been researching the Greek-Australian historical and contemporary presence in Australia, and internationally, since 1982. Their project and archive, In Their Own Image: Greek-Australians, encompasses visual, oral and literary material. Various national and international touring exhibitions, books, articles and a film documentary have been produced. Of their exhibitions the most pronounced have been 'In Their Own Image: Greek Australians' and 'Selling an American Dream: Australia’s Greek Cafe', the latter is currently touring.

Dr Vicky Karaiskou
v.karaiskou@noc.ac.cy Vicky Karaiskou is Assistant Professor at the Open University of Cyprus. Program 'Studies in Hellenic Culture'. Her research focuses on the relationships between works of visual art and their social environment, along with the ways through which iconographic, or other components contribute to the understanding of the historical and social phenomena. Her current projects extend in two directions: the first focuses on the reasons and processes through which art and culture in Greece during the last thirty years are often understood and consumed as social symbols. The second explores public sculptures in Cyprus.

Prof. George Kanaris
ghanarisd@primusonline.com.au
George Kanaris OAM is Adjunct Professor at Charles Sturt University. He has published extensively on the literature, historiography, press and language of the Greeks in Australia and New Zealand. His books include Greeks Voices in Australia, The Greek Press in the Antipodes, and Intergroup Language Influences on English and the Contribution of the Greek Language.

Dr Elizabeth Kefallinos
elizabeth.kefallinos@mq.edu.au
Elizabeth Kefallinos coordinates the Greek Studies Program at Macquarie University. She has published on Modern Greek literature, Education and Greek-Australian women and writers. She currently is working on an oral history about the identities of Greek Australian women, since the mass migration of the 50s.

Mr Dimitri Kepros
sdepart@greekorthodox.org.au
Dimitri is currently publishing director of St Andrew's Orthodox Press and since 2002 lecturer in Canon Law, Modern Greek and Christian Education at St Andrew's Greek Orthodox College, Sydney.

Dr Paul McTear
paul.mctear@mq.edu.au
Paul McTear teaches Greek and Roman history at Macquarie University, having moved there from the University of Auckland in 2007. His research interests are in early Christianity, and Hellenistic Egypt. With Philippe Guillaume, he edited Ptolemy I Philadelphus and his World (Leiden, 2008). He and Dr Elizabeth Kefallinos created Macquarie University's Open Universities Australia unit The Olympic Games, Ancient and Modern.

Dr Blanche Mendel
blanche.mendel@mq.edu.au
Blanche Mendel is currently the convenor of the Bachelor of International Studies at Macquarie University where she is responsible for the delivery of a number of subjects including Citizenship: Past, Present, Global, The European Union and the International Studies Internship. She has extensive experience in archaeological fieldwork, including nine seasons at the Bronze Age site of Troy, and is a frequent guest lecturer in the Department of Ancient History at Macquarie University.

Prof Alanna Nobbs
alanna.nobbs@mq.edu.au
Alanna Nobbs has a background in Classical languages and is Head of the Department of Ancient History at Macquarie University and Deputy Director of its Ancient Cultures Research Centre.
Dr Ken Parry
ken.parry@mq.edu.au

Dr Parry is Senior Lecturer in the Department of Ancient History at Macquarie University specialising in Byzantine History (including Art and Architecture), Patristics, Eastern Christianity and Silk Road Studies. He has edited The Blackwell Dictionary of Eastern Christianity (1999) and The Blackwell Companion to Eastern Christianity (2007) and has contributed to numerous other books and journals. He is currently engaged in researching early Christianity in Egypt, India and China.

Ms Sophia Salellis
s.salellis@uns.edu.au

Ms Maria Shialis
maria.shialis@flinders.edu.au

In 2008, Maria completed a Bachelor in International Studies with a Diploma in Language at the University of Adelaide. A year later she completed a degree in Modern Greek with First Class Honours, and was awarded the Greek Orthodox Community of S.A. Inc - Con Marinou AM Prize. She is currently a scholarship recipient undertaking a Ph.D degree by research at Flinders University, investigating the settlement of the Greek-Cypriot migrants and refugees.

Dr Kenneth Sheedy
Ken.Sheedy@mq.edu.au

Dr Kenneth Sheedy was appointed the founding director of the Australian Centre for Ancient Numismatic Studies in the department of Ancient History at Macquarie University in 2000. He received his doctorate in Classical Archaeology from the University of Sydney in 1987. Between 1988 and 1991 he was a curator at the Powerhouse Museum in Sydney. He was appointed deputy director of the Australian Archaeological Institute at Athens in 1991. In 1997 he obtained the position of curator for the Sylloge Numorum Graecorum Project at the British Museum, London. His fields of research and teaching are Greek numismatics, and the art and archaeology of Greece with emphasis on the archaic period. He has a special interest in the archaeology and history of the Cycladic islands. In addition to his on-going studies in the coinage of the Cyclades, South Italy and Athens, he is interested in Geometric pottery, Protoattic pottery, archaic sculpture and the early history of Delos.

Ms Mersina Tonys-Soulos
mersina.tonys-soulos@mq.edu.au

Mersina presently working on her Ph.D. through CRSI (Centre for Research on Social Inclusion) Macquarie University, titled ‘Whatever happened to Australia’s Multiculturalism, compare and contrast with the E.U.’ Completed MA through Macquarie, B.A (Hons) UNSW.

Ms Andrea Stylianou
andrea@andreastylianou.com

Andrea, a Macquarie University scholarship recipient, is a freelance journalist who previously working in the Australian mass media as a daily newspaper reporter with News Corporation for about 10 years. Andrea also worked at the UN Headquarters in New York, in the Department of Public Information. Andrea’s PhD project - in the fields of political science and international relations - focuses on her knowledge and interest in Cyprus, which is her country of birth and where she was made a refugee at a young age, along with her family.